Executive Institute: Be a catalyst for continuous improvement

■ June 5-7, 2001 in Orlando, Florida

The 2001 Executive Institute provides interactive and intensive instruction of high-performance coaching. Not sports coaching, but professional coaching that gives instruction and training to others. A high-performance coach helps employees see their potential, guides them to reach that point where their excellence surpasses their imagined goals, then encourages them to rise even higher. As a participant, you will leave the Executive Institute with the ability to create in others a vision that continually stretches.

To be an effective high-performance coach you must possess more than a basic understanding of professional coaching. Dr. Joan C. Curtis, owner of Executive Expertise, is an outstanding professional in this field. With 17 years of experience in human-relations training as a communications consultant, Curtis will provide you with the communication skills necessary to effectively facilitate continuous improvement. You will learn the methods necessary to provide encouragement. She will show you how to share the possibility of success with other professional employees while coaching them to move up to the next level. She will also impart the important skill of how to assist employees to accept, tolerate, and learn from a loss as they move forward toward their goals.

The total of 725 member institutions, nine more than at any other point in NIRSA history, is composed of two-year and four-year universities, military MWR departments, correctional facilities, YMCA/YWCA facilities, community recreation departments, and elementary/secondary schools. Additional records broken

Career Management Tips

What is the secret to success for job seekers? Often what sets a candidate apart is his or her proactive approach to a job search. According to “How to Take Charge of Career Progress” by Sherridan Revell from careerjournal.com, following the steps below will help you get started:

Before you start

1. Determine your priorities. What’s most important to you in your job? Assess your priorities to identify the types of companies to target in your job search.
2. Identify your long-range goals. What’s your motivation to leave your current position—lack of advancement, under-appreciation, seeking tuition reimbursement? It takes time to decide if a change is a step in the right direction.
3. Stay on top, educationally and professionally. The job market changes rapidly, so education is an important continuing commitment. Take all opportunities to boost your knowledge, whether through higher education, professional workshops or conferences. Investing the time, effort and money to earn job-specific certifications will give you an edge.

Your action plan should include

1. A well-tailored, professional-looking resumé is the first thing your potential employer sees that reflects how you view yourself as a professional. To be effective, it should convey your position level.
2. Start networking. Don’t overlook any contact that might help open doors of opportunity. Professional associations and trade-show contacts often are untapped resources.
3. Identify the players in your field. Research and list companies that ideally suit your qualifications and long-range interests. Include recruiters who specialize in your level of employment and types of companies.
4. Send an appropriate resumé and custom-written letter to the key decision-maker of the company. This proactive approach gets assertive job candidates in the door.
5. Pursue advertised positions through the Internet, industry journals and/or classified newspaper ads.
6. Utilize the resources right under your nose. Take advantage of NIRSA’s Career Opportunities Service, which provide the most current positions available in your field. Check out this valuable service in the Members Only section of www.nirsa.org and get started on your future.

FOR MORE INFORMATION ABOUT ACCESSING THIS SERVICE OR TO POST A POSITION: Contact Kim Daley, NIRSA Membership Services Coordinator at (541) 766-8211 x21 or kim@nirsa.org.

Effective Email Marketing

Email is an excellent way to promote your recreational sports activities, especially if you are on a shoestring marketing budget. You'll maximize your email's effectiveness when you follow a few key steps:

- Target your message to the appropriate audience. Provide information and special offers relevant to your customers' interests.
- Keep it short and concise. Focus your email on information your participants NEED to know.
- Keep it clean. Avoid the temptation to be too sophisticated in your design. Keep it easy on the eye with a lot of line breaks and white space.

- Put your editor's cap on. Proofread.
- Break up run-on sentences and use simple language.
- Value is key. Your customers already receive an average of 60 emails a week; make sure yours is one that is read.
- Maintain consistency with your messages by always providing timely, relevant information.

For the second year, the NIRSA Foundation has the opportunity to double contributions made during the 2001 NIRSA Annual Conference & Recreational Sports Exposition.

If a minimum of $10,000 is contributed prior to the Honor Awards Banquet on Saturday, March 31, an anonymous donor will match the amount for the NIRSA Foundation! This would bring a grand total to at least $20,000!

Contributing is made easy this year with donation boxes placed conveniently in the registration area and at the NIRSA booth in the Exhibit Hall and the NIRSA Store.

Remember, if everyone gives a little then everyone earns a lot. Support the NIRSA Foundation, give until it feels good, reach $10,000 in contributions during the conference and the funds will be matched! For more information, come to the Opening General Session, Tuesday, March 27 at 7:30P.M.

Historical Prints Now Available

Remember and honor NIRSA's African-American heritage and history by proudly displaying photos of the founders of the National Intramural Association. The NIA became the National Intramural-Recreational Sports Association in 1975. Next year's National Recreational Sports & Fitness Day, which coincides with NIRSA's Founding Day on February 22, 1950, will be a particularly appropriate time to display photos at your organization.

Our heritage originates when twenty African-American men and women intramural directors from eleven Historically Black Colleges met at the first NIA Conference at Dillard University in New Orleans. We proudly honor NIRSA's heritage and history by sharing our story and archives with people who are willing to learn of this significant moment in recreational sports history. You too can share NIRSA's past.

You may purchase two feature archive photos—at market cost—through the NIRSA National Center by calling (541) 766-8211 to place an order. Each photo set includes an 8x10 photo of NIRSA's founder Dr. William Wasson and a 6x10 group photo of the first meeting of the NIA. NIA Executive Secretary, NIRSA Past President, Paul Gunsten, dies

NIRSA president (1969), Paul H. Gunsten passed away in January. Paul was an Associate Professor Emeritus at Virginia Tech in Blacksburg where he had been recreation and intramural director for many years. Paul earned his master’s degree from the University of Kentucky, and then began his teaching and coaching career at Bridgewater College in Virginia. He was active in the field of health, physical education and intramurals for his entire career at the secondary, college and university levels.

Beginning in 1966, Paul was active in the National Intramural Association (NIA), which later became NIRSA. He became President of NIA in 1969 and was also elected the first Executive Secretary, a position he held from 1969 through 1971. He received the NIRSA Honor Award in 1973. His contributions to the Association are numerous: newsletter editor, numerous committees, compilation of the first operating code, instrumental in having the conference proceedings printed, host of the NIA conference at Virginia Tech in 1971, author and conference presenter. Through his efforts in 1972, an intramural section was formed and officially recognized as a part of the Virginia Association of Health, Physical Education and Recreation-VAHPER; he was its first chairman.

Paul’s contributions to the field of recreation over the past 35 years continue to provide valuable opportunities for NIRSA members today. He will be missed.
