- After losing eight pints of blood in an accident in 2007, Garret founded Pink Gloves Boxing (PGB). He then teamed up with fellow football player, Nick Milodragovich, and in just three short years, PGB was recognized in Entrepreneur Magazine's Top 100 Innovative Businesses. The success of the business uncovered a problem from Garret's past. Schools were asking him to give presentations to help inspire the youth. Though a stutter is impossible to overcome completely, his lazy lips of yesterday have put a smile on his face, today. Twice, Garret has finished in the semi-finals of the World Championship of Public Speaking and in 2011, he finished in the top 18 of 35,000. From stutterer to speaker—from getting kicked out of high school English to writing several books—Garret is too funny to be called a motivational speaker and too inspiring to be called a comedian.
